Summary of reasons for decision:

The publication is classified as objectionable due to the manner in which it presents violent and criminal activity. The publication consists of eight illegal fights filmed with hand-held cameras. The participants are encouraged to inflict serious harm on their opponents, and this is presented as an exhilarating and entertaining activity for participants, spectators, and the viewer. Many of these brutally violent incidents are watched by cheering crowds communicating an attitude in which the viewer is invited to share. While the violence and cruelty depicted in the DVD does not result in immediate severe or permanent injury, the extent to which, and the manner in which, it is presented would be injurious to any audiences. The publication therefore has the potential to transmit to its likely audience not only an open contempt for the criminal law, but also an attitude that committing criminal activity is exhilarating, personally advantageous and a means to achieve a certain level of notoriety. The association of alcohol consumption, dirt biking and popular music further glamorises the fighting as a spectacle for entertainment.

A classification of "objectionable" places a limit on the right to the freedom of expression as set out in s14 of the New Zealand Bill of Rights Act 1990. However, given the high extent and degree to which the publication presents criminal acts and violence as a means of entertainment, the classification is considered to be a reasonable limit prescribed by law that can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.
